AMUSEMENTS

"The Confession," at the Columbia. A powerful dramatic story of human faith, love, devotion and sacrifice. "The Confession," Henry Walthall's great success, is making a tremendous impression on all who have seen it this week at the Columbia theater. "The Confession" will be shown at the Columbia today and tomorrow, closing its four-day run tomorrow night.

Not a screen spectacle, "The Confession" derives its great appeal from its human story and the human way in which that story is enacted. It runs the gamut of human emotion and cannot but make a great impression on the minds of all who see it. The story carries an appeal for all, as well as a great moral message, and the fact that the scenes are set among the splendors of the great northwest and that the actors are the best to be had only add to the interest of the picture, which has been praised in every newspaper review ever given it, and endorsed by such eminent churchmen as Cardinal Mercier of Belgium, Cardinal Gibbon and Archbishop Hanna.

"The Confession" is being shown with a special music setting. Augmenting numbers for today and tomorrow are the Pathe Review, the Literary Digest Topical and a Selected comedy. Beginning Thursday, the Columbia will offer a special double-program featuring "Haunted Spooks," Harold Lloyd's first two-reel comedy, and William Russell in "This Hero Stuff."

GUY BATES POST IS COMING WITH HIS ORIGINAL COMPANY

When the great American star, Guy Bates Post, is seen at the Elks theater in his most significant dramatic success, "The Masquerader," it will be with his original company, notable among which is his leading woman, Alice John, an actress of notable reputation new to this city. Miss John was born in England and it was only after coming to this country that she engaged in stage work. She was associated for a considerable period with the Charles Frohman organization.

"The stage calls many of the intellectual wanderers of the earth," says Miss John. "It is the restless ones, the seekers for new lands and new sights, who get into the profession, largely. And because the world of the theater is a world quite all its own makes the attraction the greater. For this reason the folk of the theater never tire of it. The travel is hard, the hotels in smaller cities often bad, there are long rehearsals, many failures and much seeking after new parts to play, even when one is long established in the profession. Yet in spite of all these disadvantages the folk of the theater love the life and the work. They love it because it satisfies their desire for constant change, apart from other ambitions."

"In many cases players could have attained to recognition in other walks of life, but they remain on the stage because therein they find the opportunity to be constantly in a new atmosphere. Of course, players enjoy long runs in the big cities, but I think with the majority that if they had to stay in one city for an indefinite length of time you would find many of them resigning and seeking a new part in a play which could take them away where they could see a new set of streets and meet new faces."

American
Spring was delightfully typified at the American last night. Pearl Sharkey in a charming garden dance was the very essence of the happiest, gayest season of the year, the orchestra's notes were fairly bristling with life and joy and the large crowd of dancers thrilled to the enlivened spirit of the place. Miss Sharkey wore a dainty little costume in spring's favorite color—green—with the periest of green bonnets to match, and carried a quaint little basket of flowers. Of course, the American's guests were more than pleased—and showed it as they always do.

The same spirit of mirth and good feeling is sure to prevail at the American all week, for numerous parties have already spoken for reservations and King Brady with his big wonder orchestra are just bubbling over with the desire to make dancing a greater joy than it has ever been before.

intense action, and startling situations. In the role of Jack Derry, the champion demonstrates his versatility, for each of the pictures finds him called upon to offer something entirely different from his former appearances, and yet lose nothing of the strength of the character which he is making famous.

On the same program H. B. Warner will be offered in "The Pagan God," a particularly strong character study, and of the same nature that has been to a great extent responsible for this star's rise in the world of pictures.

Peacock
A plot of fun, a carnival of pleasure, a night of delight, in fact, one big glorious good time is promised every one who gets in on the big carnival at the Peacock next Thursday night. As an extra feature Manager Walter Willis Powell is staging a prize waltz on the same night and some of the best dancers in the city have indicated their intention of competing.

In order to bring out real terpsichorean talent, Manager Powell is offering prizes of unusual beauty and value. To the gentleman winning the waltz contest will be awarded a solid silver loving cup and the lady will receive a gold wrist watch. Reservations are already being made for this big night of nights, but many good tables can still be obtained. Plenty of seats have been arranged in the balcony for those who desire to watch the fun and enjoy the prize waltz contest.

Gus Hill's Minstrels Coming
